

Science News

from research organizations

Print Email Share

Earth's internal heat drives rapid ice flow, subglacial melting in Greenland

Date: April 4, 2016
Source: Helmholtz Centre Potsdam - GFZ German Research Centre for Geosciences
Summary: The North Atlantic Ocean is an area of active plate tectonics. Between 80 and 35 million years ago tectonic processes moved Greenland over an area of abnormally hot mantle material that still today is responsible for the volcanic activity of Iceland. The mantle material heated and thinned Greenland at depth producing a strong geothermal anomaly that spans a quarter of the land area of Greenland. That distant history of the North Atlantic region contributes to the present-day ice loss, suggests a new report.
Share: Facebook Twitter Google+ LinkedIn + Email

RELATED TOPICS

- Earth & Climate
 - Global Warming
 - Ice Ages
 - Snow and Avalanches
 - Climate
 - Geography
 - Oceanography

RELATED TERMS

- Mantle plume
- Greenland ice sheet
- Yellowstone Caldera
- Ice sheet
- Mid-ocean ridge
- Geology of the Capitol Reef area

FULL STORY

A glacier in Greenland (stock image). These secrets of Greenland's past have been hidden by the 3 km thick ice sheet covering the landmass and are now revealed by the researchers using an innovative combination of computer models and data sets from seismology, gravity measurements, ice core drilling campaigns, radar sounding, as well as both airborne, satellite and ground-based measurements on the thickness of the ice cover.

Credit: © the_lightwriter / Fotolia

To understand Greenland's ice of today researchers have to go far back into Earth's history. The island's lithosphere has hot depths which originate in its distant geological past and cause Greenland's ice to rapidly flow and melt from below. An anomaly zone crosses Greenland from west to east where present-day flow of heat from Earth's interior is elevated. With this anomaly, an international team of geoscientists led by Irina Rogozhina and Alexey Petrunin from the GFZ German Research Centre for Geosciences could explain observations from radar and ice core drilling data that indicate a widespread melting beneath the ice sheet and increased sliding at the base of the ice that drives the rapid ice flow over a distance of 750 kilometres from the summit area of the Greenland ice sheet to the North Atlantic Ocean.

The North Atlantic Ocean is an area of active plate tectonics. Between 80 and 35 million years ago tectonic processes moved Greenland over an area of abnormally hot mantle material that still today is responsible for the volcanic activity of Iceland. The mantle material heated and thinned Greenland at depth producing a strong geothermal anomaly that spans a quarter of the land area of Greenland. This ancient and long-lived source of heat has created a region where subglacial meltwater is abundant, lubricating the base of the ice and making it flow rapidly. The study indicates that about a half of the ice in north-central Greenland is resting on a thawed bed and that the meltwater is routed to the ocean through a dense hydrological network beneath the ice.

The team of geoscientists has now, for the first time, been able to prove strong coupling between processes deep in Earth's interior with the flow dynamics and subglacial hydrology of large ice sheets: "The geothermal anomaly which resulted from the Icelandic mantle-plume tens of millions of years ago is an important motor for today's hydrology under the ice sheet and for the high flow-rate of the ice," explains Irina Rogozhina. "This, in turn, broadly influences the dynamic behavior of ice masses and must be included in studies of the future response to climate change."

These secrets of Greenland's past have been hidden by the 3 km thick ice sheet covering the landmass and are now revealed by the researchers using an innovative combination of computer models and data sets from seismology, gravity measurements, ice core drilling campaigns, radar sounding, as well as both airborne, satellite and ground-based measurements on the thickness of the ice cover. The location and orientation of the zone of elevated geothermal heat flow shows where Greenland moved over the Iceland mantle plume.

This unexpected link between hotspot history and ice sheet behavior shows that the influences on ice sheets span a huge range of timescales from the month by month changes of the ice cover to the multi-million year epochs over which Earth's mantle and tectonic plates evolve. Besides this, the results of the study provide an independent test for models of the opening of the North Atlantic which after a three-decade-long debate still is not fully understood.

Story Source:

The above post is reprinted from materials provided by Helmholtz Centre Potsdam - GFZ German Research Centre for Geosciences. Note: Materials may be edited for content and length.

Journal Reference:

- Irina Rogozhina, Alexey G. Petrunin, Alan P. M. Vaughan, Bernhard Steinberger, Jesse V. Johnson, Mikhail K. Kaban, Reinhard Calov, Florian Rickers, Maik Thomas, Ivan Koulakov. Melting at the base of the Greenland ice sheet explained by Iceland hotspot history. Nature Geoscience, 2016; DOI: 10.1038/NGEO2689

Cite This Page:

MLA APA Chicago

Helmholtz Centre Potsdam - GFZ German Research Centre for Geosciences. "Earth's internal heat drives rapid ice flow, subglacial melting in Greenland." ScienceDaily. ScienceDaily, 4 April 2016. <www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2016/04/160404111603.htm>.

Share This Page:

Earth & Climate News

April 5, 2016

Earth's Internal Heat Drives Subglacial Melting

Vibrations Make Large Landslides Flow Like Fluid

Hybrid System Could Cut Coal-Plant Emissions

Shocking Collapse of Gorilla Subspecies

Latest Headlines

updated 12:56 pm ET

Water Cycle Instability Is Here to Stay Posing Major Political and Economic Risks

Apr. 4, 2016 — The current instability and unpredictability of the world water cycle is here to stay, making society's adaptation to new risks a vital necessity ... read more »

- > Water Cycle Instability Here to Stay
- > El Nino's Impact On Ocean's Food Source
- > Fishing for the Future of Coral Reefs
- > Coral Reefs, Biodiversity and Climate Change
- > Common Pesticides Kill Amphibian Parasites
- > Western Lifestyle Spells End of Biodiversity
- > Climate Tipping Point: North Atlantic Pivotal
- > Acid Oceans from CO2: Severe Damage
- > Sex Reversal in Amphibians Due to the Pill
- > Global Carnivore Conservation at Risk

more stories >

Latest Videos

from news services

Mexico's Popocatepetl Volcano Bursts Into Life

Raw: Pakistani Floods Displace Thousands

Kenya Prepares for a Record-High Ivory Burn

Droughts Create Acute Severe Malnutrition in Southern Madagascar

more videos >

Thanks for the feedback! Undo

We'll use your feedback to review ads on this site.

Related Stories

'Ice Age Blob' of Warm Ocean Water Discovered South of Greenland

Feb. 19, 2016 — Greenland experienced several abrupt and brutal climate changes during the last ice age. But even during the coldest periods a blob of warm surface water existed ... read more »

Why Is Greenland Covered in Ice? Processes in Deep Earth Interior Created Conditions for Glaciation

Jan. 5, 2013 — The ice on Greenland could only form due to processes in the deep Earth interior. Scientists now explain why the conditions for the glaciation of Greenland developed only so recently on a geological ... read more »

Greenland Ice Is Melting -- Even from Below: Heat Flow from the Mantle Contributes to the Ice Melt

Aug. 11, 2013 — The Greenland ice sheet is melting from below, caused by a high heat flow from the mantle into the lithosphere. This influence is very variable spatially and has its origin in an exceptionally thin ... read more »

Enhanced Melting of Northern Greenland in a Warm Climate

Nov. 9, 2012 — Scientists show how the northern part of the Greenland ice sheet might be very vulnerable to a warming ... read more »

See fewer ads and support this site.

Contributor works on millions of sites and all of your devices.

Strange & Offbeat

PLANTS & ANIMALS

Scientists Find Surprise Lurking in Crocodilian Jaw

Recent Evolutionary Change Allows a Fruit Fly to Dine on a Toxic Fruit

World's Smallest Diode Created

Programming Language for Novel Biological Circuits

EARTH & CLIMATE

Laser Cloaking Device Could Help Us Hide from Aliens

City Birds Are Smarter Than Country Birds

Could Ireland's Ecosystems Cope If We Introduced St. Patrick's Scaly Foes?

First Successful Extraction of Ancient DNA from a Southern African Mummy

FOSSILS & RUINS

Fossil of 'Early Spider' Discovered; 305 Million Years Old

A World Map of Neanderthal and Denisovan Ancestry in Modern Humans

Human Ancestors Explored 'out of Africa' Despite Impaired Nasal Faculties

More Ancient Viruses Lurk in Our DNA Than We Thought

See fewer ads and support this site.

Contributor works on millions of sites and all of your devices.

In Other News

from NewsDaily

SCIENCE

Orbital presses U.S. lawmakers to end ban on retired missiles

Bezos praises third Blue Origin launch-and-land rocket test as 'perfect'

Pentagon awards $75 million for advanced textiles institute

Europe gives green light to first gene therapy for children

HEALTH

Vietnam reports first Zika infections, raises alarm

Valeant to cut Addyi, dermatology sales forces -memo

Poverty to blame for most youth homelessness worldwide

Virtual doctor visits may not be best for urgent care

ENVIRONMENT

U.S. judge approves BP settlement for 2010 Gulf of Mexico oil spill

Judge orders U.S. to address climate threat to wolverines

Drought rules pushed Californians to cut water use by nearly 25 percent

Climate change threatens hearts, lungs but also brains: U.S. study

TECHNOLOGY

Trump's hotel chain faces another credit card system breach: Blog

U.S. unveiling new comparison Internet service labels

Amazon CEO says latest Kindle version is ready

Reddit change sparks concerns about U.S. government spying

Print Email Share

Free Subscriptions

Get the latest science news with ScienceDaily's free email newsletters, updated daily and weekly. Or view hourly updated newsfeeds in your RSS reader:

- Email Newsletters
- RSS Feeds

Follow Us

Keep up to date with the latest news from ScienceDaily via social networks:

- Facebook
- Twitter
- Google+
- LinkedIn

Mobile Apps

Get the latest news from ScienceDaily via our free mobile apps, available for download on the following platforms:

- iPhone/iPad
- Android

Have Feedback?

Tell us what you think of ScienceDaily -- we welcome both positive and negative comments. Have any problems using the site? Questions?

- Leave Feedback
- Contact Us